

OC's Aloha House for Women

Women's recovery needs are unique. Many women attempt to mask their addictions with the day to day tasks of being a wife, mother, sister, and/or girlfriend. At OC's Aloha House, women will live in a safe, sober, gender-specific environment where they can begin a new life based on accountability, honesty, and the 12-Step principles. OC's Aloha House for Women bridges the gap between inpatient treatment and traditional sober living homes.

OC's Aloha House for Women offers upscale surroundings and well-appointed rooms, including:

- Security and comfort of a drug and alcohol free home

Donna Myers, Executive Director

For Donna, OC's Aloha House for Women was a quiet thought that changed into a leap of faith. It was a moment when her toes were hanging over the edge and she was afraid of falling, but more fearful of taking that step back. Her personal journey of healing began years ago. Donna believed that, with help, she could heal her childhood scars of the trauma of incest – scars she carried throughout most of her adult life. That first leap of faith (and the subsequent rewards) laid the groundwork for opening a home specifically for women and their special needs.

Patricia Otsuji, CASI, Program Coordinator

Patricia brings with her more than 10 years of experience working with adults and adolescents in substance abuse and alcohol treatment. She has worked in both residential and outpatient treatment including PC1000, an outpatient program for first time drug offenders. Patricia is a well known and respected individual in the community of recovery. She has been on her own path of recovery since 1995 and is passionate about supporting women who struggle with the disease of addiction. "I understand how critical it is to build a firm foundation for success in the journey of ongoing recovery from addiction."
